Papa Francisco cancela audiências por gripe leve

The Vatican announced that Pope Francis canceled his Tuesday audience due to a mild cold, as a precaution while the pontiff prepares to travel to Belgium and Luxembourg this week.

The news of the illness came 10 days after the pope's return from a long journey to the Pacific-Asian region, a tour that was seen as a test of his health and resilience. During these travels, which included dozens of hours in the air and visits to humid and polluted cities, the 87-year-old pope frequently appeared lively and energetic, but the cancellation of his Tuesday audience on Tuesday reignited concerns about his health.

Francisco, who had a BR chair and lost part of a lung when he was young, canceled some obligations last year due to a cold and lung inflammation. The Vatican did not announce any change in the travel plan for Belgium, which remains scheduled for Friday the 7th.

During this visit, Francisco is expected to meet with a group of victims of sexual abuse by Catholic priests in Belgium, according to the site Cathobel, associated with the French-speaking church in Belgium. In 2010, a commission established by the church reported generalized abuses in the country.

Francisco was hospitalized three times in recent years. In June 2024, he underwent surgery for a hernia that was causing painful intestinal blockages. He had an operation in the colon in March 2023 and, in March of last year, was hospitalized due to a respiratory infection.

The pope's journey to the Pacific-Asian region this month was his longest in 11 years and was made despite his known difficulty with travel. Supporters see the tour as a sign not only of his determination to build a church with a future less Eurocentric, but also of his personal resilience.

Doing another journey, even if it is much shorter, just two weeks after returning, is likely to test his resilience again.
